

I work on the Identity Card system for the UK Government.

>The "National Identity Register" is the most detailed citizen database of its kind in the world. I am security cleared, which means I can get anything I want, on any UK resident. Address, health info, financial records, criminal records, whatever.

>It's all meant to be stored securely but anyone who works on the project knows it can't be. Better yet, I have a contact who works for a mobile telephone company, so sometimes I can cross-match a person to their geographical location for the last six months or more. I know exactly who they speak to. And when their mother calls. And where she lives, too.

>I sell information, if the price is right. Trade is good at the moment. It's mostly private investigators and newspapers, but I get some unusual stuff too. I don't ask questions. It's nothing personal; it's just business.

>I am God :o)

The Government wants state management of personal identity.
It isn't simple. Or safe. NO2ID is a non-partisan campaign to stop it. Join us. www.no2id.net

I want to protect privacy and freedom in Britain. I enclose a cheque for £ ..... payable to "NO2ID".
